Worlds in Collision

'This provocative and timely collection contains rich diversity in both method and content. The average quality of contributions is remarkably high, and the best are gems.'

Henry Shue, Professor of Ethics and Public Life, Cornell University

'Booth and Dunne have brought together a star-studded galaxy of authors – intellectuals, academics and thinkers who explore the myriad facets – terror, power, culture – of the attack on the twin towers from the viewpoints of international relations and international political economy. The essays are tightly argued and form a valuable collection for students, teachers, policymakers and policy watchers.'

Lord Desai of St Clement Danes, Professor of Economics, London School of Economics

'In a moving and disturbing series of messages, some of the world's smartest and best informed political analysts reflect on the causes, meanings and consequences of September 11, 2001. Except for challenging the idea of two well-defined worlds – one good, one bad – at war, the authors disagree widely. Taken together, however, their essays issue an eloquent call for broader, deeper and more humane responses to today's political crises, and lay out many possible elements of those responses.'

Charles Tilly, Joseph L. Buttenweiser Professor of Social Science, Columbia University

'As we try to understand September 11, 2001, it would be hard to find a more diverse and interesting set of authors than those assembled here. Agree or disagree, you are bound to learn from them.'

Joseph S. Nye, Jr, author of The Paradox of American Power and former Assistant Secretary of Defense

'This fascinating and well-written collection of essays provides abundant evidence that scholars sharply disagree not only about the causes of the September 11 terrorist attack on the United States, but also about how best to combat the problem.'

John J. Mearsheimer, R. Wendell Harrison Distinguished Service Professor, Political Science Department, University of Chicago
