Preface

This book is an extension project of my academic sojourn in Lancaster, United Kingdom for almost three and a half years. My interest in political Islam was focused on the Middle Eastern region and it further flourished when I worked on my Master's dissertation on the concept of jihad. Initially, I planned to make a comparative study between the dynamism of political Islam in Southeast Asia and the Middle Eastern region but later found out that I should inveigle more deeply Malaysia's political Islam. There was several areas that needed several study. The continuous debate on the ideal Islamic polity between conflicting parties i.e. Umno and Pas enticed me to research this topic. Furthermore, although many scholarly articles and books have been published on this area, there is yet a book or article that tries to link the notion of political Islam and security predicaments as important variables in Malaysia. This book then is a modest attempt to fill that gap.

Some parts of this book (especially chapter 7 and 8) reproduced here, with kind permission of the publisher, Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore, www.iseas.edu.sg/pub.html. It was earlier published in the journal of Contemporary Southeast Asia, Volume 21, number 2 (August 1999) under the title "National Security and Malay Unity: The Issue of Radical Religious Elements in Malaysia."

I could not have completed this book without the support and help from various people and organizations. I owe special gratitude to Dr Gerd Nonnemen of Lancaster University and Prof. Tim Niblock of Newcastle University for providing me guidance and intellectual stimulation. Thanks are also due to, Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia (UKM), which generously supported my academic sojourn in Australia and England. To my wife and children, whose encouragement has inspired me to finish this book; to my father and my late mother who always reminded me of the importance of knowledge; my deepest and sincere thanks to you all. Last but not least thanks to the editorial team of Penerbit UKM that made this book project possible.
