Let IWK supply `water' to Singapore

Ramesh Pillai

I SYMPATHISE with our Prime Minister Datuk Seri Dr Mahathir Mohamad in his attempts to reason with Singapore over the need to increase the rate for raw water. He has brought up the matter so many times and for so many years.

The Singapore Government kept avoiding the issue, and instead flexed its technological muscles.

It proudly announced that it had the know-how to turn waste and sewage water into drinking water. It bottled it as Newater, and officially drank it on Independence Day.

If Singapore still insists on buying our raw water dirt cheap, let's find them a new source that fits their budget. The one that comes to mind is Indah Water Konsortium. Singapore can brand it as "New RaWater". It
