There is no alternative to learning English

T.T.K

WE are lucky to have a strong Government led by a far-sighted Prime Minister. Under his strong leadership, Malaysia has impressed developing as well as developed countries.

Datuk Seri Dr Mahathir Mohamad is now taking another political risk in implementing English to teach Science and Mathematics. Many socalled nationalists and narrow-thinking Opposition representatives will politicise this matter hoping to win a few extra votes in the next election.

I am not at all impressed with the non-supportive role played by some political parties in this regard.

My nephew who studied in a Chinese school subsequently graduated from a local university more than 10 years ago.

Equipped with a strong command of Bahasa and Chinese, he ventured into society with high hopes. But he could not meet market expectations because of his poor English. It was only after he went to the US, improved his English and got a master's degree that he fulfilled his ambition of
