Bush had better watch out for Soros

Mohd Arshad Raji

THE statement by George Soros (NST, Nov 12) that US President George W. Bush is a danger to the world merely supports what Tun Dr Mahathir Mohamad has said since Bush decided to wage an all-out war against terrorism, invading Afganistan and Iraq. Dr Mahathir has once again proved to be right.

Bush now has a more serious enemy at home than abroad. While billions in tax-payer money is being used to finance Bush's war, Soros will be dipping into his millions to thwart Bush's attempt at a second term in next year's presidential election.

With this threat, Bush ought to be wary of what he does or say. Certainly, his idea of expanding the war into Syria and Iran, which was a probable option had the war in Iraq been successful, now has to be downplayed.

Knowing Soros, he may have his own reasons for the disagreement with Bush's policies on defence and security.

And it is not too difficult to guess that his reasons are related to his worldwide business interests, which may have been affected because of Bush's aggressive policies.
