ALL successful men have agreed in one thing—they were causationists. They believed that things went not by luck, but by law; that there was not a weak or a cracked link in the chain that joins the first and last of things. A belief in causality, or strict connection between every pulse-beat and the principle of being, and, in consequence, belief in compensation, or that nothing is got for nothing—characterises all valuable minds, and must control every effort that is made by an industrious one. The most valuable men are the best believers in the tensions of the laws. 'All the great captains', said Bonaparte, 'have performed vast achievements by conforming with the rules of the art, by adjusting efforts to obstacles'.
