Pakatan Rakyat has today quoted an internal source in saying that the alliance is in a deadlock situation with BN - where both sides could respectively win 110 parliamentary seats - three days ahead of the national polls.

"BN is now in its final stage of vote-buying, (along with) employing foreign workers and using 'delible' inks," said DAP political education bureau chief Liew Chin Tong.

NONEHe urged the voters to go back to Sabah and Sarawak to vote, as both states have been deemed important by Pakatan in capturing Putrajaya.

Liew (right) especially names the Sibul parliamentary seat for its critical condition, where DAP may lose the seat in the upcoming polls if the voter turnout rate is below 75 percent.

He explained that with two more days to go, the party machinery needs to focus on encouraging the voters to come home.

Liew added that the alliance has a clear picture of over 53 percent of voters who support Pakatan Rakyat, an increase of two percent as compared with the 2008 elections.

However, a similar survey was not able to be carried out in Sabah and Sarawak, so the support on the ground could not be fully analysed this time.
