

Papagomo 'retires' blog, says report
MalaysiaKini.com
June 6, 2013

Infamous pro-BN blogger Papagomo had announced his retirement from mainstream blogging early this week, reports Malay language daily Sinar Harian.

"I'm done. That is what Gomo can say about the struggle under the name Papa Gomo blog name. Let new bloggers shake the world," wrote the Malay daily in its article, quoting the Twitter account @PapaGomo believed to be operated by the blogger.

The blogger believes that there will be many more competent pro-BN bloggers that will continue to fight the good fight.

NONE"Gomo wants to focus on my clothing business. Anyway the fasting month is near and time to look for extra cash," the blogger supposed tweeted.

Papagomo, or Wan Muhammad Azri Wan Deris as he is alleged to be, previously made headlines when he posted steamy videos purportedly of prominent opposition leader Anwar Ibrahim.

Papagomo currently faces a RM100 million defamation suit from the opposition leader for the materials he posted, and the case is expected to be heard early next year.

Anwar has named Wan Muhammad as the owner and operator of the Papagomo blog, though the exact identity of the blogger is still shrouded in mystery as the latter continues to deny that he is the infamous blogger.

Papagomo had previously warned that he has more videos of Anwar, releasing snippets of pictures and short clips alleged to be of the Pakatan de-facto leader, promising more tantalising expose'.

However, should his "retirement" prove to be true, this may be cancelled, if not postponed.

