A new political parody video featuring Rosmah Mansor doing battle with Dr Mahathir Mohamad in the veins of the Pokemon video game has emerged.

This video is a continuation of an earlier video which featured Mahathir duking it out with Prime Minister Najib Abdul Razak.

It featured Najib "escaping" on a plane, leaving Rosmah to take on Mahathir in Pokemon's turn-based combat system.

The clip makes reference to numerous current political issues - from increasing highway toll charges to increasing fuel costs - but was ultimately aimed a poking fun at everyone involved.

For example, Rosmah was only able to inflict massive damage on Mahathir by singing Garth Brooks hit "If tomorrow never comes".

The epic battle culminates in Rosmah throwing a bomb at Mahathir, who deflects it, but a character resembling Second Finance Minister Ahmad Maslan brings it back.

Before fading to black, an image is displayed, depicting businessman Jho Low holding a bottle of champagne and a television remote while laughing maniacally.

The first video had thus far garnered more than 280,000 views. The video was released shortly after Najib failed to show up at a scheduled dialogue with NGOs titled "Nothing2Hide".
