Prime Minister Najib Abdul Razak wishes he could spend more time with his family, something which he said has been difficult due to his busy schedule.

"If possible, I really want to to spend more time with my children, wife and family.

"But as the prime minister, the rakyat are also a big family that I need to give my full attention to," Najib said in a blog posting today.

But no matter how busy one is, Najib said people should make an effort to keep in touch with their loved ones.

This includes keeping up with their children, even if it's just through WhatsApp or Skype, and also looking after aging parents.

"The fact is, at the end of our lives, not a single person wants to spend more time in the office.

"Instead, we all want to spend every second with our family."

The premier said he has been blessed with a happy family, and that his mother is still healthy.

Najib added that people should count their blessings too.

"I wish to remind myself and all Malaysians, that we are blessed with happy families, and that while they are still around, we should not let go of this opportunity to be with them as much as possible."
