

Truly, a school for all

Recently a friend of mine started campaigning for 'Satu Sekolah untuk Semua' (One School for All). Of course, I support a school where all races can mix freely.

I myself, am a graduate of a missionary school (SXI Penang), where all the races intermingled and I'm extremely proud of it.

However, for my two-year old daughter, we are already planning to send her to the nearest SRJK (C). Why, some may ask?

Well for a very simple reason. China is going to be the next biggest economy in the world and I'm sure it will be the biggest once she grows up.

I want my kid to be in a strategic position where she is able to speak the language of the biggest economy in the world.

I also want them to speak fluently in Bahasa Malaysia, our national language, as Malaysia is the only one country for me and also English (the world's language).

That might be a very tall order but we are going to put a lot of effort to make it happen.

In the mean time, I would like to tell supporters of Kempen SSS, that SRJK (C) is also open to all Malaysians.

Which means that Chinese-vernacular schools are already Satu Sekolah untuk Semua.

If you are keen to equip your children strategically with the language of the world's largest economy when they grow up in this globalised world, I suggest you register your kids at the nearest SRJK (C).

It truly is a school for all.
