The battle for the hearts and minds of young Malaysia has begun with Nurul Izzah Anwar staking claim on a multi-racial Malaysia that allows no room for racism or religious bigotry - two of the most serious issues ailing the nation, not only curbing economic growth but also making the people grossly unhappy.

Hot on her heels is Umno's Khairy Jamaluddin. The 34-year old Youth chief has been trying to transform himself into a 'liberal' of sorts but with mixed success due partly to his own past record of using race-championing to gain popularity but mostly because of his own political inconsistency - even now.
