The refusal of DAP from taking part in the Parliamentary Select Committee (PSC) to find a solution to help resolve the rare earth issue shows that they are irresponsible and do not want to convey the views of the rakyat to Parliament.

All the while, DAP has objected against the establishment of the Lynas rare earth refinery. Now, it is saying that it will not join the PSC which is set up aimed at helping to resolve the issue. DAP's decision sounds somewhat baffling. Based on hearsay, DAP has declared that it will not take part in the PSC before any terms of reference are made. This means that DAP has neglected performing any good for the rakyat.

DAP has exaggerated the Lynas plant issue to gain public sympathy. Similarly, does it mean that by not taking part in the PSC, this signifies that DAP has given up expressing the views on behalf of the public, thereby abandoning the hopes of the masses to have a voice in Parliament ?

Are DAP's view representative of the view of Pakatan Rakyat? Does it mean that all members of Pakatan Rakyat will take the same decision? Do they prefer to go for street demonstration rather than setting up the PSC to voice the views and opinions of the people? Pakatan will then allege again that the government does not listen to the views of the rakyat. Whatever their action may be, they will not help in contributing towards any positive outcome.

Maybe DAP is of the opinion that by instigating the rakyat to go against the government, it would move nearer and nearer towards Putrajaya. That might be the reason why DAP is reluctant to convey the message of the masses to Parliament.
