KUALA LUMPUR, April 16 (Bernama) -- Students involved in the demonstration, urging the government to abolish loans from the National Higher Education Fund (PTPTN), should return the money that they had borrowed.

Higher Education Minister Datuk Seri Mohamed Khaled Nordin said the group of students involved in the demonstration must do so to prove that they do not want the PTPTN loan scheme to continue.

"I feel they are very brave young men, so they must return the money," he said after launching the Accreditation of Prior Experiential Learning (APEL) here today.

Khaled added that Universiti Selangor (Unisel), owned by the Selangor state government, must also declare whether the PTPTN should be abolished in their establishment.

"They (Unisel) must declare whether they want their students to receive PTPTN or not? If true they want the PTPTN to be abolished, they should not advertise in the papers that Unisel applicants can get PTPTN loan," he said.
