PUTRAJAYA, March 29 (Bernama) -- Former prime minister Tun Dr Mahathir Mohamad said it is difficult to predict the results of the coming general election due to the rather confusing prevailing situation.

He said various assumptions had been made about support for Barisan Nasional (BN), with some people saying it was increasing and others saying otherwise.

"What is certain, it won't be easy for BN to get two-thirds majority this time. The opposition now is not like that of the past, and the current situation is rather confusing."

He said this when asked to comment on former finance minister Tun Daim Zainuddin's statement that BN would easily win in only three states - Johor, Melaka and Pahang.
