SINGAPORE, Sept 30 (Bernama) -- The haze has worsened with the three-hour pollutant standards index (PSI) rising into the "very unhealthy" range, hitting 203 at 3 pm.

The 24-hour PSI read 125 to 165 in the unhealthy range.

A reading of 101 to 200 indicates unhealthy air quality; 201 to 300, very unhealthy; and above 300, hazardous.

There were also thundery showers today mainly over northern, eastern and western Singapore in the late afternoon.

The hazy condition in the island republic will persist today with the 24-hour PSI expected to be in high-end of the unhealthy range and low-end of the very unhealthy range, according to the National Environment Agency.
