My thanks go first to all the authors who contributed personal stories about their participation in the two Singapore elections of 2011. This is also their book and their story as well as mine. Collectively we created history and are proud to record our role in these two watershed elections. I am particularly gratified that the authors wrote about their experiences in graphic detail, their trials and tribulations, the conflicts within them and with their loved ones, their friends and their colleagues, often baring their souls in the process.

The outcome is a unique book of autobiographical-style accounts that tell stories straight from the heart. These would not have been possible without the help of all our supporters to whom we owe an eternal debt of gratitude. I would have liked more of them to contribute their stories as well but am sorry that they could not do so like my media liaison chief Faz, and Basil.

I would like to acknowledge my sincere thanks to Sir Ivor Crewe and Professor Staffan Lindberg for contributing the foreword and prologue respectively. Both have been forthcoming and steadfast in their support. Their deep knowledge of politics in various countries around the world and in different time periods provide the international and historical context for us to view Singapore's recent electoral experiences, and in the process help us understand where and how we are headed in the future.

My thanks also go to Associate Professor Lily Rahim, Professor Rajiva Wijesinha and Tim Tacchi who provided their respective endorsements of the book without hesitation when I requested for them.

Finally I owe my wife Patricia an immense debt of gratitude for her support and encouragement without which I would never have been able to embark on this political journey of a lifetime. She took care of the family and the children while I was busy with my political work. She is a tower of support and a great source of strength. I would also like to thank all my siblings and their families, other relatives and family friends for their active support during the two elections.

There are others such as the photographers who uploaded their photographs on Facebook without leaving behind their names. They deserve our thanks too, including the designer who created the "Heart of the Nation" logo that was used at the presidential election rally in Toa Payoh Sports Stadium. This scene is reflected on the book cover.

Last but not least, I thank everyone at the publisher Ethos Books, particularly Hoe Fang, Alvan and Khai Xin, for their meticulous care and attention to detail in ensuring the successful and timely completion of the book.
