About the author

FATMA KASSEM completed her Ph.D. in the Department of Behavioural Science at Ben-Gurion University of the Negev. Her research stemmed from deep interest in how structural and hegemonic power relations work within and between societies, and how they influence women and marginal groups. Kassem has both academic and practical training in conflict resolution, with practical experience of facilitating dialogue in groups of Jews and Palestinians in Israel. During 2007–08 she was a fellow of the research programme Europe in the Middle East/The Middle East in Europe (EUME).

Acknowledgements

This book is based on my Ph.D. dissertation, which I completed at Ben-Gurion University in Beer Sheva, Israel. I considered quitting many times. The reasons for this are as many as my moments of despair. The persistent well of inspiration that energized my writing was the resilience that the elderly women I interviewed demonstrated in telling me their life stories. I am indebted to them for two reasons: first, for sharing their life stories, without which this research would have been impossible; second, for infusing me with the motivation necessary to finish this project. In heartfelt thanks, I dedicate this book to them. I would also like to dedicate this book to my mother, Zakieh Mhimad Omar, and to the memory of my father, Ahmad Ibrahim Kassem, both of whom lived through the events of 1948. The story they told me when I was growing up shaped my life as much as it did theirs.

It is a great privilege to thank Dr Lev Grinberg, of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Ben-Gurion University, and Professor Hanna Herzog of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Tel-Aviv University, for the professional guidance, patience and wisdom they brought to my academic work. Professor Herzog was supportive in reading and offering critical comments on my dissertation. I would like to convey special thanks to Dr Grinberg for guiding me from the initial stages of this research, through the many frustrations I encountered along the way, right up to the writing of this book. His steadfast availability and advice, as well as his moral and practical support, were invaluable. Without him, this research would not have been possible.

Several other individuals and foundations deserve thanks for their roles in providing me with the resources necessary to complete the research. I would like to thank Professor Rivka Carmi, currently president of Ben-Gurion University, for her contribution in making transcriptions of the life stories possible, and Professor Jimmy Weinblatt, who awarded me the Rector's Scholarship of Ben-Gurion University.

I would like to extend my thanks to the Council for Higher Education in Israel, which selected me for the scholarship of Excellent Ph.D. Student Award. In addition, I greatly appreciated the support and contributions of the Chaim Herzog Center for Middle East Studies and Diplomacy at Ben-Gurion University, and of Shaml, the Palestinian Refugee & Diaspora Center in Ramallah. I would also like to thank the Foundation Friends of Nazareth in Tilburg, the Netherlands, for their encouragement, and for lending their moral and financial support to my research, in particular the translation of this book.

I also would like to thank the Berlin–Brandenburg Academy of Science and Humanities, along with the Fritz Thyssen Foundation, for providing me with a scholarship to be a fellow in the research programme 'Europe in the Middle East/The Middle East in Europe' (EUME) at Berlin during the academic year 2007–08. I would also like to thank my co-fellows and the staff of EUME. Professor Cilja Harders of the Free University Berlin also deserves special thanks for her collegial support.

I wish to thank Kate McGuinness for her editorial advice and comments on the text. Olga Kuminova also assisted in translating parts of the text from Hebrew to English. I would like to thank Amney Athamney for her assistance in transcribing the life stories.

Finally, it is crucial to state the following. The academic analysis and interpretations expressed in this book solely reflect my perspective as the author. They do not reflect the positions of anyone acknowledged above; nor do they reflect the opinions of any of the interviewees. I alone am responsible for these views. If there is any correspondence between my views and those of others, this is just a happy coincidence. Likewise I bear full responsibility for any errors in the text.
