

Making Development Sustainable

THE WORLD BANK GROUP
AND THE ENVIRONMENT

FISCAL 1994

Making Development Sustainable

PUSTAKA PERDANA

1004751

WORLD BANK PHOTO/CURT CARNEMARK

Investing in people, which reduces poverty and population growth, is an urgent moral imperative and is essential for arresting environmental degradation. Providing clean water to the 1 billion people who do not have access to it, while ensuring that the world's use of water resources is sustainable both in terms of quality and quantity, is an enormous challenge.

---

Making Development Sustainable

THE WORLD BANK GROUP
AND THE ENVIRONMENT

FISCAL 1994

THE WORLD BANK
WASHINGTON, D.C.

©1994 The International Bank for Reconstruction
and Development/The World Bank
1818 H Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20433, U.S.A.

All rights reserved
Manufactured in the United States of America
First printing September 1994

This report is a study by the World Bank's staff, and the judgments made herein do not necessarily reflect the views of the Board of Executive Directors or of the governments they represent.

The text is printed on recycled paper that exceeds the requirements of the 1988 guidelines of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, section 6002 of the Resource Conservation Recovery Act. The paper stock contains at least 50 percent recovered waste paper material as calculated by fiber content, of which at least 10 percent of the total fiber is postconsumer waste, and 20 to 50 percent of the fiber has been deinked.

Printed on Recycled Paper

ISBN 0-8213-2925-1
ISSN 1014-8132

This report was prepared by the Environment Department of the World Bank in close collaboration with the regional environment divisions and country operations departments. The principal authors were Jocelyn Mason (coordinator), John Dixon, and John Redwood III; the team included Jocelyne Albert, Olav Kjørven, Barbara Lausche, Marian Mabel, Jill Montgomery, Letitia Oliveira, Pushpa Schwartz, Alfredo Sfeir-Younis, Peter Stephens, Jamison Suter, and Dechen Tsering. The editors were Nancy Levine, Charlotte Maxey, and Paola Brezny. Andrew Steer and Mohamed El-Ashry provided guidance.

Contents

Foreword	xi
Abbreviations and Acronyms	xiii
Overview	1
From Policy to Practice	2
Main Themes for the Future	3
Assisting Countries with Environmental Stewardship	6
Lending: To Whom, How Much, and What For	6
Problems Encountered, Lessons Learned	8
Strategies for Environmental Management	9
Climbing the Learning Curve	10
Minimizing Adverse Impacts of Bank-Financed Investments	12
Environmental Assessment	13
Resettlement	14
Building on the Synergies between Development and the Environment	16
Poverty Reduction and the Environment	16
Efficient Resource Use and the Environment	18
Addressing Regional and Global Environmental Challenges	18
Regional Environmental Initiatives	19
Global Environmental Programs	19
Building Capacity for the Task	20
Equipping the Bank	21
Building Partnerships for Change	21
Improving Openness and Accountability	21
Strengthening the Private Sector Role: The IFC and MIGA	22
Notes	23
Part 1. The Fourfold Agenda	25
1. Assisting Countries in Environmental Stewardship	26
Managing the Environmental Portfolio	27
Pollution and the Urban Environment	32